

Chioma Nnaji, MPH, Med

For more than 20 years, Chioma Nnaji, MEd, MPH has worked in the HIV/AIDS field at the intersection of public health, racial justice and immigrant rights. She serves as a Senior Program Director at the Multicultural AIDS Coalition (MAC) in Boston where she leads programming in community engaged research, capacity building trainings and community mobilization. Specifically, she founded and currently directs the Africans For Improved Access (AFIA) Program - an HIV/STI outreach, screening and navigation program engaging Black immigrants in Massachusetts. Her ongoing organizing with African immigrant communities has established a national voice advocating for the community and well-respected efforts in service delivery, research, and civic engagement.

As a trainer and experienced facilitator, she founded Ocha Transformations, a firm bringing leaders, organizations, and communities together to maximize social impact and sustainable change. Chioma is constantly seeking innovative ways to facilitate partnerships, to think differently about problems, and to challenge the dominant narrative. She has served in leadership positions in academic and community institutions and grounds her actions in equity and justice with a particular lens to meaningful engagement of people impacted by intersecting oppressions.
